Portland, Oregon www.traveloregon.com

Portland, also known as the “Rose City,” is a city with an eclectic combination of a scenic waterfront, majestic mountain views, distinctive bridges, endless outdoor activities, fabulous museums, and trendy restaurants along with gallery and shop filled neighborhoods. Crisscrossed by rivers, mountains and vineyards, Metropolitan Portland offers an urban adventure. Within a few minutes’ drive of downtown Portland are Pinot-producing wineries (most with year-round tasting rooms), kayak-friendly waterways that nudge wildlife preserves and, of course, the glorious foothills of Mount Hood.

Dear Colleague,

Although CMOS chips continue to hang on well into the nanoelectronics domain, it is still certain that eventually the continued shrinkage of MOSFET devices will come to an end. What is not at all certain is which alternative candidate nanoelectronics technology will eventually replace it. Single electron transistors? Spintronics? CNT or nanowire devices? Or molecular electronics? All are being assiduously pursued in research labs, with results to be presented at IEEE NANO 2011, along with applications of nanotechnologies to optics, biomedical research, and packaging, to mention but a few of the areas to be covered in the conference.

Please join us as a sponsor and exhibitor at the IEEE's 11th International Conference on Nanotechnology (IEEE NANO 2011) to be held at the Marriott Downtown Waterfront Hotel, Portland, Oregon, 15-18th August, 2011 at the heart of the Silicon Forest. NANO 2011 is jointly sponsored by the IEEE Nanotechnology Council, the IEEE Oregon Section, IEEE Region 6, the Oregon Nanoscience and Microtechnology Initiative (ONAMI), and Portland State University's Maseh College of Engineering & Computer Science.

NANO is the IEEE's flagship conference in nanotechnology, and offers the opportunity for researchers in its many diverse areas to meet with others in different areas for cross-fertilization of ideas and understanding. The attendees stand at the forefront of nanotechnology R&D.

The conference rotates between North America (Arlington, 2008), Europe (Genoa, 2009), and Asia (Seoul, 2010,) with record attendance in Seoul. There will be a number of new program tracks, covering the most recent fields of interest, which will draw the most prominent researchers in nanotechnology research and applications. More details can be found at www.ieeenano2011.org.

Every effort has been made to keep costs down, and to hold sponsorship levels to a minimum. The Technical Exhibition will be co-located with the research poster papers, to ensure maximum visibility, with all coffee breaks and two receptions held in the exhibition hall to guarantee maximum exhibitor exposure.

I look forward to hearing from you!
